IF LOVE IS A BATTLEFIELD, COULD THIS BE YOUR SECRET WEAPON?

Dr. Vanderhood

Mankind invented science over one hundred years ago to better understand the world, and especially what turns people on. That journey has led us to the next frontier in human sexual attraction. We call them Pherotones, and we believe these tiny, subsonic infrasounds have the potential to make your love life blossom.

MAKE LOVE, NOT LIKE.

The study of Pherotones is too hot for mainstream science. That's why I want to make them widely available to the general public. I need you, and millions of other citizen scientists, to help me prove the amazing power of Pherotones to attract the opposite sex.

WHY ARE PHEROTONES SO CONTROVERSIAL? BECAUSE PEOPLE ARE TALKING.

Mainstream science may never understand Pherotones and their awesome power to spark passion. Dr. Vanderhood and her team of researchers at the Auditory Institute, RTP believe that Pherotones are all around us, embedded in every sound we hear every day. These nanosounds, cacophonite micromelodies and microtones resonate in the ear and stimulate activity in the brain stem where the sex drive is known to reside. A cascade of chemicals is released from the brain, then travels to the target's nether regions, potentially triggering an explosion of SEXUAL arousal, EUPHORIA and a LOSS OF INHIBITION.

"JUNK SCIENCE" OR A NEW HOPE FOR MANKIND?

Dr. Myra Vanderhood truly believes that Pherotones occur in nature. It is quite possible that animals use these microsounds to attract mates during rutting season. Until now, science has known very little about the use of sound in the dating practices of the animal kingdom.
